Crafting Scholarship: A Successful Writing Life . . . (Source: Robert Milardo, Ph.D.)
"In my conversations with successful authors, I have noted recurring themes that define productive writing practices across disciplines, as well as practices that interfere with productivity. Success in writing derives from some very different approaches grounded in a few key principles." To learn more about these principles, please visit the following link at the National Council on Family Relations:

New Results Available from American Time Use Survey . . . (Source: National Council on Family Relations)
The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics recently released new data from 2014 for the American Time Use Survey (ATUS), which measures time spent on work, household, child care, volunteer, leisure, and other activities.

The ATUS 2014 files are available to researchers to use for their own analyses, and a press release highlights some of the new findings.
